No additional benefits.	Like most clinical academics, I provide advice to colleagues in academic institutions around the world, charities (e.g. BHF, CRUK, Diabetes UK), Scottish and UK government, and colleagues based in the research departments of commercial companies. This is not directly remunerated but I do it as part of my (paid) job.	I co-own three properties (all in the UK), and have an investment portfolio that includes shareholdings. This portfolio is managed on my behalf by an investment fund company. I have placed a restriction on any investments in armaments, tobacco or companies with any question over their human rights record. There is no current restriction on investment in life sciences (including pharma) companies although because my portfolio is externally managed I am not aware of which life sciences companies are included in the portfolio and I do not control any choices made on which companies are included (other than the restrictions noted).
